A 71-year-old man with advanced rectal cancer treated with low anterior resection of the rectum for complete removal of the tumor was reported. The patient had undergone anterior resection and lymph node dissection, but recurrence in the pelvis had occurred 3 years after the first operation. Because the pelvis was contaminated with the peritoneum, curative operation was not possible. Therefore, low anterior resection was performed with total pelvic exenteration, and was able to provide a radical operation. The postoperative course was uneventful, and he is alive without recurrence at 1 year 8 months after the operation. and improving better air quality, an experience most South Africans will readily accept.
